

Scoresheet Baseball June 11th, 2007

Hi All: This week we are going to start off with a brief note on pitching rotations, and then print a list of overall leaders from throughout all of Scoresheet in various categories. If you wonder how your team stacks against other teams from throughout Scoresheet then this is the list for you.

The way pitching rotations work in Scoresheet is that each week the computer figures out which of your pitchers will start that week's games, and then the actual rotation is drawn randomly so that your #1 pitcher is not always facing your opponents #1 pitcher, #2 vs. #2, etc. By listing 'teams a pitcher prefers to face' that random drawing becomes heavily weighted towards that pitcher facing that particular team(s). Some team owners use that column to have their top pitchers go against the team at the top of their division, and other owners use 'prefer to face' to have their lefty or righty pitchers face teams that are weaker against that type of pitcher. Also, if more than one of your starting pitchers has 2 starts available that week, then the computer will give the second start in Scoresheet to the pitcher who is listed higher in the rotation, unless a pitcher listed lower down in the rotation has a prefer to face against even one of the teams you are playing that week. So, that 'teams prefer to face' column will also influence how many starts a pitcher might get in a certain week.

Have a great week! - Jeff Barton

Listed below are the overall Scoresheet leaders. These are teams from throughout all of Scoresheet, (though only teams in leagues with at least 8 teams are shown in these overall leaders). These leaders are just THRU LAST WEEK'S GAMES (games thru 6/3/07) ONLY!! (BL is for leagues drafting players from both the AL and NL.)
