

Scoresheet Baseball June 22nd, 2009

Hi Again: Summer is now officially here, and the baseball season is just a week from being half over. So it must be time for some of our guys to heat up, eh? Who would have thought back in March that come late June Russell Martin would have just one HR and a slugging percentage of .302; or that DiceK would have an ERA over 8; or that Grady Sizemore would be hitting .223? I took Grady third overall this year in my local one year league – to say he is not living up to my expectations would be quite the understatement. I wonder which player is hurting their Scoresheet teams more – Sizemore or ARod?

LINEUP NOTE: Please remember that to play 2B, SS or 3B in Scoresheet a player must qualify at one of those three positions. So while a 3B can play SS, or a 2B can play 3B (all with fielding penalties), a player who only qualifies at 1B or OF or catcher or DH can not play 2B, SS or 3B in Scoresheet. Also, only players who qualify at catcher can play catcher in a Scoresheet game. If you list a guy who does not qualify at catcher, or at one of 2B/SS/3B, as a starter at one of those positions on your lineup card he'll be moved to the bench.

SYMBOLS NOTE: GIDP stands for Grounded into Double Plays, OSB stands for Opposition Stolen Bases (bad), and OCS stands for Opposition Caught Stealing (good). These last 2 stats are based on what the opposing basestealers did that week in the majors, and also on your catcher's throwing arm. Like fielding range, a catcher's throwing arm is based on what he did the last two years - which are the numbers printed next to his name in the draft packet.

Listed below are the overall Scoresheet leaders. These are teams from throughout all of Scoresheet, (though only teams in leagues with at least 8 teams are shown in these overall leaders). These leaders are just THRU LAST WEEK'S GAMES (games thru 6/14/09) ONLY!! (BL is for leagues drafting players from both the AL and NL.)
